Director, Education in Palliative and End-of-life Care (EPEC) Program, Buehler Center on Aging
Institute for Public Health & Medicine

The Buehler Center on Aging, Health & Society at Northwestern University's Feinberg School of Medicine is one of the founding centers within the new Institute for Public Health & Medicine (IPHAM). In support of programmatic development for IPHAM, the Buehler Center seeks an excellent scholarly researcher and educator to lead the Education in Palliative and End-of-life Care (EPEC) Program. The successful candidate will develop an independent research and education agenda in support of the mission of the Buehler Center and IPHAM and will develop strategic partnerships in support of the EPEC Program’s national and international teaching agenda. This position will provide overall guidance at the assistant professor level, and will have the opportunity to collaborate cross-departmentally with Northwestern’s investigators and physicians.

Candidates will have an MD and/or PhD in a relevant field and experience in research and medical professional education. The successful candidate will provide evidence of research productivity, and ability to attract external funding, versatility in research and education methodologies, and the ability to work independently and with interdisciplinary teams. This continuing full time position at the assistant professor rank offers competitive negotiable salary, excellent benefits and is tenure eligible. Hiring is contingent upon eligibility to work in the United States. Applications will be accepted until the position is filled. Proposed start date is open.
