Save the Date: Key Concepts in Dissemination and Implementation Science: Ensuring Equity in Research Translation Webinar: February 12

Key Concepts in Dissemination and Implementation Science: Ensuring Equity in Research Translation Friday, February 12, 2021 9AM - 12PM CT

Please join us February 12 for a virtual workshop. Dissemination and implementation (D&I) science is a growing research field that seeks to inform how evidence-based interventions and programs can be successfully adopted, implemented, and maintained. This workshop will provide an introduction to key D&I terminology, methods, and measures, with a fundamental focus on the value of involving community stakeholders in all aspects of research while ensuring equity in the translational process. This free workshop is appropriate for those interested in D&I science, health equity, and/or the development, adoption, or implementation of evidence-based interventions and programs.

If you are interested in attending, please email implementationscience@northwestern.edu
